Rockville-Based Aronson Foundation Visits TLC's Katherine Thomas School to Award $6,000 Grant

Rockville, Md. —At TLC's Katherine Thomas School, students with autism, ADD, ADHD, and auditory processing deficiencies have tremendous difficulty staying focused in the classroom due to their disabilities, making academic achievement extremely challenging. Four years ago, KTS elementary classroom teachers began using sound-field FM amplification systems to address these challenges. Aronson Foundation, the charitable arm of Rockville-based Aronson & Company, supports local nonprofit organizations that focus on the needs of children. Aronson Foundation awarded TLC—The Treatment and Learning Centers, a local, private, non-profit agency that provides educational, therapeutic, and vocational services to children and adults with disabilities a $6,000 grant to expand this successful program into all KTS middle school classrooms.

Aronson Executives including Lisa Cines, Managing Officer of the Aronson Foundation; Jeffrey Capon, Senior Officer; and Stephen White, Director of Sales and Marketing, were on hand to present the grant. TLC's Judith Owens, Director of KTS Lower and Middle Schools; Esther Goetz, Senior Speech Pathologist at KTS; Paul Deerin, President of TLC's Board of Trustees; and Debbie Ezrin, TLC's Director of Development gratefully accepted this grant award from Aronson Foundation executives on April 26, 2007. Richard Pavlin, TLC's Executive Director was also on hand to help celebrate the partnership of two Rockville-based organizations—Aronson Foundation and TLC's Katherine Thomas School.
